What To Do When Your Employer Discriminates Against You Because of Your Disability.

Let's pull together before we're torn apart.

Disability Rights

If you have a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more major life activities, e.g. walking, seeing, speaking, or hearing, you should know what your workplace rights are. And if you have had a disability in the past or if your employer thinks you have a disability (but you don't), the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) and Title 11 of the Lincoln Municipal Code may protect you.

The ADA protects job applicants and workers against disability discrimination. One part of the ADA outlaws discrimination in job application procedures, hiring, training and other employment practices.

Have Any of These Things Ever Happened to You?

- You were fired when your boss refused to modify your work schedule to allow treatment for colon cancer, although you performed the essential functions of your job.
- You are blind, you've been sexually harassed by a coworker, and you're having trouble getting your employer to understand that a woman who is blind can be a target of sexual harassment.
- You use a wheelchair and have several years experience as a receptionist, but you didn't get hired because the employer wanted a person without an obvious disability dealing with customers.

Pregnancy Discrimination

Discrimination related to temporary disabilities caused by pregnancy may be illegal under the Pregnancy Discrimination Act.

What Can You Do If You Experience Discrimination?

- 1) If you think you've been discriminated against, write down what happened.
- 2) If you're working, continue doing a good job and keep a record of your work.
- 3) Find out how other people with disabilities have been treated.
- 4) Talk to your employer.
- 5) Call LCHR at 441-7624 and make an appointment to file a charge.
- 6) Remember discrimination based on a bona fide disability is ILLEGAL.
